ADDRESS

TO THE

PROPRIETORS

EAST INDIA STOCK.

tors drew many unjust attacks on my character; and it is probable, I may be censured by some, for having suffered such reports as were spread against me during the contest to have remained so long unanswered; but knowing, that even the authors of them could not themselves believe them; and conscious to myself, that every part of my conduct, in the great share I had in the management of the Company's affairs, would bear the most rigid scrutiny, and the more known be the more approved; I held B them in too much contempt to merit any antiwer. But as I find the unjust attack on my character has been followed by an attack on my fortune, and infinuations thrown out to justify these proceedings, very injurious to my honour, I reluctantly submit to vindicate myfelf, and must rely upon the candour of the Proprietors, not to impute it to oftentatious vanity, if in speaking of myself I do aver, that I founded all my actions in their service on honourable motives.

To state this clearly, I am obliged to go back to that period when commerce was the Company's sole object. The first principle on which the Company's settlements were established, was intirely commercial. The Mogul government had, during the long and wise administration of Aurengzebe, taken such deep root, that the many nations which formed the empire of Indostan were subjugated to the Mogul in various forms; some of them tributary and hereditary, and others governed by Nabobs, or Viceroys, under the immediate appointment of the Emperors.

Such

Such was the state of the empire when the English settled in India; and, in the reign of Furruckseer, they obtained phirmonds, or royal grants, for establishing themselves in Bengal, Madrass, and Surat, with privilege of trading duty-free; and a grant of a certain district of land to settle upon, and liberty to fortify and govern themselves by their own laws. But as the English saw no violence to be apprehended from a people who had a just idea of commerce, and a government at that time well administred, they built with very little view of defence, and carried on their trade free from oppression.

The governors of the diftant provinces discovering the weakness to which the power of the Emperor was reduced by the invasion of Nadir Shah, were no longer restrained by fear; each assumed and exercised sovereign authority over his province, and looked on his government as an heritage to his family. Scarce any more of the annual sums, before paid by them to the Mogul, were sent to court; and, to maintain themselves in their sovereignty, they levied forces far beyond what the ordinary revenues would maintain: From hence oppressions became necessary, and, in their turn, the Europeans were oppressed, not only in their trade, but large sums extorted from them by violence. Mons. Dupleix, the Governor of Pondicherry, was the first who took the alarm, and was the first who discovered the superiority of European discipline, and from hence was led into the idea of acquiring a territorial sovereignty in India.

It is probable, he at first extended his views no farther than a district round Pondicherry; but when once engaged in the politics of the country, his successes so far surpassed his expectation, and opened such a scene of power to him, that he disdained the narrow limits he might at first prescribe to himself; and no doubt but they were enlarged, not only to the conquest of the Carnatic, but to the extirpation of all other European nations, and even to the reduction of the whole Mogul empire, and to make it a dependant state on the crown of France.

The English beheld his progress with astonishment, but were not rouzed to action, till they they found themselves on the point of being swallowed up by the French power. Forced to it, they with reluctance, in 1750, undertook the support of Mahomed Ally against Chunda Saheb, under whose name the French carried on their ambitious projects.

It is not my intention to enter into a minute detail of that long war, maintained on our fide against a constant superiority of numbers, at the expence of the lives of many thousands of brave men, and at the risque of near a million sterling of the Company's property; I shall only observe, that from our fuccesses, the Nabob's situation was so different at the end of the year 1753, from what it was in 1750, at which time the fingle city of Trichinopoly was the only part of his dominions that remained unconquered by the French, that in 1753 he had recovered, and was master of, almost the whole Carnatic; and at that time the French resources seemed nearly exhausted.

The French Company, elated at the fuccess which attended Mons. Dupleix in the commencement of the war, at first faintly approved his measures; but the opposition of the other European powers, the unforeseen events of war, and the deviating fo widely from their natural object of commerce, rendering the event very uncertain, there was nothing could fix their faith in the rectitude of those meafures, but fuccesses that might attend them. and a happy period to the war, which Monf. Dupleix promifed them in every letter. But. instead of these successes, they saw the countries, of which they expected the revenues would be their reward, in the hands of their enemies, and their stock exhausting in the fupport of an uncertain war, which ruined their trade, and the manufactories of the country, from which they had before reaped advantages fuitable to their establishment.

The war appeared in the same light to the English Company, and therefore both agreed on a neutrality for the Carnatic, till means should be found to put an end to that and all future wars by negociations at home. But as it regarded the Carnatic only, it did not check the progress of the French arms in the Decan, the Soubah of which had ceded to them Massu-

lipatan, and four provinces, which yielded them a revenue of 400,000 l. sterling a year. Nor did there appear any check to their progress in that country: the French gave law, by their influence over the Soubah, to a country as extensive and populous as France; and by a prudent management of what they had so acquired, or by increase of dominion, it was in their power even then to have laid a foundation on which M. Dupleix's great ideas of conquest might have been realized. And altho' the French Company themselves should have chosen to adhere to their commercial interests, Dupleix's projects suited too well with that spirit of conquest which prevails in the French court, to be neglected; and upon the breaking out of the war it is reasonable to conclude, from the forces sent out under General Lally, that they adopted them in their utmost extent. Our fettlements were but a fecondary object; their forces were so formidable, that they, with great probability, imagined them a trifling obstacle, (which furmounted) Cape Comerin and the Ganges might have been the boundaries of their dominions. The spirited efforts of Mr. Pocock could not prevent their landing their army: St. Davids fell; no obstacle but Fort St. George remained to the accomplishment of their farther conquests. Here they met with a resistance suitable to the importance of the object; and I am persuaded, that Messrs. Pigott, Laurence, Draper, and many other gentlemen of the garrison would have been buried under its ruins, sooner than have surrendered the place.

The siege was raised, their army reduced, and misfortunes pressed them on every side.

Prior to the siege of Madrass, they had lost all their settlements in Bengal: four hundred Europeans, sent under Col. Ford into the Decan, by the great success of that gallant officer, put a period to their expectations in that country. The reduction of Masulipatan, the four northern provinces, and the making all the French army there prisoners, greatly contributed to our success at Fort St. George, as it diverted great part of the French forces, who otherwise would have been called to the siege of Madrass, and deprived them of supplies of money and provisions. And finally, as Col.

Ford's

Ford's expedition obliged the French to fend from the coast 500 men for the relief of Masulipatan, of whom very few returned to Pondicherry, the French were reduced to act upon the defensive only, and were greatly diffressed for money and provisions, which Fort St. George was plentifully supplied with from Bengal. Under these circumstances the fall of Pondicherry closed the scene of all their glory, and left them not a foot of land in India.

Thus have I traced, from its commencement, the progress and issue of a war, begun on principles of French ambition, but happily terminated by the greatest efforts of valour and good conduct on the part of the English. I slatter myself, that every Proprietor must receive infinite pleasure in the reslection, that they will soon reap the benefit of these great and glorious successes, now secured to them by the XIth article of the definitive treaty. Although there are some geographical errors, such as making the Soubah of Bengal's dominions extend near 200 miles more than they do, to Yanam, and making that place the northern instead of the southern part of the coast of Orixa: the acknowledging Salabad Jing lawful Soubah of the Decan, and Mahomed Ally Cawn lawful Nabob of the Carnatic, had better have been omitted for several reasons, and may be productive of disputes hereafter between the two Companies: yet, upon the whole, the article is very advantageous to the East India Company.

As my opposition originally arose from the defects in the Preliminary Articles, (in which the interest of the East India Company appeared to me to be much exposed) it affords me a very particular pleasure to think that I have been any ways instrumental to the amendment of that article relative to the Company. Of the part I acted in it, Mr. Wood himself bore testimony in the general court; and tho it had but little weight at that time, yet I persuade myself, that when the voice of clamour ceases, that, like every other part of my conduct towards the company, will be found to have sprung from the warmest zeal for their honour and interest.

As to myself, I can with truth affirm, that the principal motive that induced me to offer myself myself a candidate for the India Direction, was the interest of the East India Company; and my reasons for espousing the cause of Mr. Rous, arose from a conviction of his integrity. Contrary to my expectation, my opponents, the very men who had fo often concurred in giving me the most public testimonies of their fense of my services, were men that opposed my coming into the Direction. Better versed in fuch business than myself, they prevailed in this dispute, and every species of calumny was made use of that malice could invent; and the first step my opponents took, after the election, was to order their fervants abroad to stop the rents of my estate in the East Indies. which they themselves had regularly paid me for feveral years, without objection. Their motives for taking such a step at such a time are too obvious to be infifted upon.

Anonymous letters in the public papers were the channel my enemies chose for those dishonourable reflections, which not one amongst them would have dared to have set their names to.

I have

I have collected, from the heap of absurdities published on that occasion in the Gazetteer of the 12th of April, 1763, the following articles.

1st. That I had refused to answer certain inquiries respecting the distribution of the Nabob's treasure.

2dly. That I had done injustice to the relations of the unhappy sufferers in the Black Hole, by with-holding from them the sums stipulated by treaty for their indemnification.

entered the treasury, and distributed the wealth according to the pleasure of those intrusted with the Company's authority, leaving the Nabob destitute, and necessitated to borrow money of the Company for his necessary expences; by all which the Company may hereafter become responsible to the Mogul.

4thly. That no fervant of the Company shall remit money home but by their cash, which order I broke through, by remitting large sums by the Dutch cash.

5thly. That I was guilty of a breach of trust, by supplying a Portuguese ship, bound from from Bengal to Lisbon, with goods and money, to the great detriment of the Company.

6thly. That I have no right to an annual revenue of 27,000 l. a year, given me by the Nabob, which must be supported and maintained at the Company's expence.

The first of these articles does not explain what the inquiries were I had refused to anfwer; I therefore do not clearly understand what the tendency of fuch inquiries were. If they had any relation to the monies received from the Nabob by the Company, the treaties entered into with the Nabob by the Admirals Watfon and Pocock, the President of Fort William and myfelf, in confequence of which the Company received near a million and an half sterling, will account for that proportion to which the Company can lay any claim. This, however does not feem to be the matter alluded to, but fomething respecting myself, or the fortune I acquired in the Company's fervice. It is well known, that I was not in England at the time the general court was held relating to the distribution of the Nabob's treafure.

treasure, and could not possibly give any answer to inquiries on that subject; but if there was any soundation for such inquiries, the Directors were wanting in their duty to the Company, in not making them after my return: and it will appear, that the Directors, under their own hands, approved of the donations bestowed by the Nabob on individuals for their services. But however, as the neglect of the Directors, if that was the case, in not calling me to account, can by no means sanctify my actions, it is necessary that I give the best satisfaction I am able relative to this matter.

I was appointed, by the gentlemen of Fort St. George, commander in chief of the troops fent for the recovery of the Company's fettlements in Bengal, on board the fleet commanded by Admiral Watson. On our arrival in the Ganges, we found the unhappy remains of a once flourishing colony on board a few merchants ships in that river. We landed, drove the enemy from Fort William, and put the Company's Governor and Colonel in possession.

The

The Nabob then came down with an army of fixty or feventy thousand men, and a heavy train of artillery, slushed by his late successes against the English. The Company's forces, consisting of a battalion of 450 men, a battalion of Seapoys, and a body of sailors from the squadron, attacked the Nabob in his camp, and defeated him. We then made a treaty with him, by which he engaged to restore all the effects he had taken. In consequence of which, the Governor and Colonel recovered in goods and money to a large amount. *

War being declared against France, we took Chandernagore; and having convincing proofs, that the Nabob's firm intention was to extirpate the English, as soon as the troops and squadron left the river, we entered into an alliance with Meer Jassier Ally Cawn, a general officer in the Nabob's service, and near relation to the Nabob; and accordingly a treaty + was concluded between us, the chief chief object of which was, on the part of our ally, a full fatisfaction to the Company and all the inhabitants, for the losses they had fustained by the capture of Fort William, and other factories which the Nabob had plundered, with grants of lands and privileges; and, on the Company's part, to place and support him in the government of the three provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orixa.

Every thing being agreed on between Meer Jaffier and the fecret committee, we marched the army to meet the Nabob, whom we intirely defeated. His death followed foon after, and Meer Jaffier was, in a few days, in poseffion of the government, and of a revenue of three millions and an half sterling per annum.

The one half of the fecret committee being then present at the capital, and a report made by the Nabob's ministers of the state of the treasury, it was settled, that half the sum stipulated by treaty should be paid in three months, and the other half in three years, all conditionally, that we supported him in the government.

The

The Nabob then, agreeable to the known and usual custom of eastern princes, made prefents, both to those of his own court, and to fuch of the English, who by their rank and abilities had been instrumental in the happy fuccess of so hazardous an enterprize, suitable to the rank and dignity of a great Prince. I was one amongst the many who benefited by his favour: I never fought to conceal it, but declared publicly, in my letters to the fecret committee of the India Directors, that the Nabob's generofity had made my fortune eafy, and that the Company's welfare was now my only motive for flaying in India. What injustice was this to the Company? They could expect no more than what was stipulated in the treaty. Or what injunction was I under to refuse a present from him who had the power to make me one, as the reward of honourable fervices? I know of none. I had furely myfelf a particular claim, by having devoted myfelf to the Company's military fervice, and neglected all commercial advantages. What reason then can be given, or what pretence could the company have to expect, that I, afrer after having risqued my life so often in their fervice, should deny myself the only honourable opportunity that ever offered of acquiring a fortune, without prejudice to them, who, it is evident, would not have had more for my having had less. When the Company had acquired a million and an half sterling, and a revenue of near 100,000 l. per annum, from the fuccess of their forces under my command; when ample reftoration had been made to those whose fortunes suffered by the calamity of Calcutta; and when individuals had, in confequence of that fuccess, acquired large estates; what would the world have faid, had I come home, and rested upon the generosity of the present Court of Directors?

It is well known to every gentleman in Bengal, that the honour of my country, and the interest of the Company were the principles that governed all my actions; and that had I only taken the advantageous opportunities that presented themselves, by my being commander in chief, and at the head of a victorious army, and what by the custom of that country. I was intitled to, the Jaghire itself, great as it is, would have been an object scarce worth my consideration.

The city of Maxadavad is as extensive, populous, and rich as the city of London; with this difference, that there are individuals in the first possessing infinitely greater property than any in the last city. These, as well as every other man of property, made me the greatest offers, (which nevertheless are usual upon fuch occasions, and what they expected would have been required) and had I accepted these offers, I might have been in possession of millions, which the present Court of Directors could not have dispossessed me of. But preferring the reputation of the English nation, the interest of the Nabob, and the advantage of the Company, to all pecuniary confiderations, I refused all offers that were made me, not only then, but to the last hour of my continuance in the Company's fervice in Bengal, and do challenge friend or enemy to bring one fingle inftance of my being influenced by interested motives to the Company's disadvantage, or to do any act that could reflect difhonour to my country or the Company, in any one action of my administration, either as Governor or commanding officer.

I little expected ever to have had my conduct impeached, or to have received such treatment from the Court of Directors, especially after the many public and honourable testimonies of approbation I had received in the orders and letters mentioned in the Appendix, No. 3.

I am not oftentatious, but upon this occasion am forced to deviate from myself, and with great reluctance expose these public testimonies of my conduct, in contrast to the dishonourable motives which have induced my enemies to impeach it.

As to the 2d article, accusing me with injustice towards the relations of the unhappy sufferers in the Black Hole, whoever will be at the pains to inquire, will learn that 625,000 l. was the sum assigned to make good the losses suffained by the Europeans; that the money was sent down to the Governor and Council at Calcutta, and by them deposited in the Company's treasury, who gave orders to their treasurer to issue it out as demanded to the secretary appointed by the 24 commissioners, chosen by the inhabitants themselves to adjust their respective claims; and that none of it ever passed thro' my hands. They will further learn, that the fum affigned did not only fuffice to pay the principal of fuch losses, but for a dividend of 22 per cent. for interest, besides a sum sufficient for another fuch dividend, which has been detained for the Company's use by orders to their servants abroad. It is very possible, that the heirs of some of the unfortunate sufferers in the Black Hole may not have been able to obtain their right, for want of attornies to apply to the commissioners for that right. If there be any fuch demands, I should imagine they may still have justice done them out of the remaining treaty-money, now in possession of the Company. But to shew in what a light the fufferers themselves regarded my conduct, I take the liberty to infert a paragraph, extracted from a letter figned by almost all the inhabitants of Calcutta, which will shew the Proprietors their fentiments of my conduct on that subject.

" Honoured Sir,

"The inhabitants of this fettlement, truly fensible of the benefits they have received from your generous assistance, in obtaining them restitution for the heavy losses they fustained in the miserable catastrophe of June 1756, and for your great care and assiduity in the collecting of that part of the Nabob's donation; Do, with the utmost gratitude, return their hearty and sincere thanks for those great favours conferred on them, the remembrance whereof will be for ever indelible."

As to the third article, which feems to intimate fome right in the Great Mogul to the treasures of the late Nabob Sarajah Dowla, and that the Company may hereafter be responsible to him on account of these treasures; it may be said, that there is such a Prince, but he is almost without territory or power; the little he possesses not being equal in extent or riches to one twentieth part of his dominions, and therefore unable to inforce in those provinces any authority that might have formerly belonged to him; and he is now fo far reduced, as to be a captive to, and in the hands of, one of the Soubahs.

However, as I would give the Proprietors all the fatisfaction I can, as to this article, I will lay all the particulars before them, and for that purpose I must inform them, that as soon as it was known, that Sarajah Dowla was fled from the city, a new ministry was immediately appointed, and the former officers became responsible to them.

The gentlemen appointed by the Governor and Council to receive the money due by the treaty, were agents for this purpose. As to myself, I was never there but once out of curiosity; and I do declare, that I never interfered, directly or indirectly, any further than what immediately related to the payment of the money stipulated by the treaty.

The treasure was most certainly the property of the Nabob Meer Jassier, as it would have been of any other Nabob, who might have succeeded to Sarajah Dowla; but for the application of the money, I will suppose, for once, that it did belong to the Great Mogul:

C 4 furely

furely then it was out of that very Imperial treasure the Company received 1,250,000 l. The sufferers at Calcutta 1,000,000 l. and the navy and army 600,000 l. and that if Meer Jassier had no right to give any part of the Imperial treasure to individuals for their services, he had no power to bestow those several large sums to the Company, sufferers, navy, and army; and if he was answerable for the one, he must for the other. If therefore, it was wrong in me to accept the savours of the Nabob out of that treasury, certainly it must be so too in the Company, sufferers, navy, and army.

As to what is infinuated, that the donations given by the Nabob to individuals, had drained his treasury in such a manner, that the Company were obliged to lend him large sums of money, this is not only a very unfair, but a false representation of sacts. The time the Company lent this money to the Nabob was, when his dominions were in peace, and the sum was only two lack of rupees, about 25,000 l. the Nabob's minister himself informed me, he had then to the amount of near a million sterling in jewels.

jewels, a large sum of money in his treasury, and to a very great amount in plate. It could not be owing to distress that he borrowed this money: his pretences of poverty might have been made use of with a political view, as is the constant practice in that country; or he might have desired to borrow money of the Company for fear they should desire to borrow of him. But the real fact was this; if I may be supposed to know it, who then presided over the Company's affairs in Bengal.

By the IXth article of the treaty with the Nabob, the Company's possessions would have been of little consequence to them, unless we were allowed to put not only our own construction on the words of the article, but also to have an additional quantity of land to the northward, to the amount of near 12,000 l. per ann. In order to accomplish this, we not only were obliged to comply with the Nabob's request, made at that particular time, but also to make presents to several of the principal officers about him, to engage his consent to this grant, which he was not bound to make by treaty; and I believe the Directors know very well: if not, I am fure the Governor and Council are well apprized of what confequence it was to the Company, to obtain the grant of those lands to the northward of Calcutta. I will venture to affirm, had the Nabob defired a loan of money at any other time but this, his request would not have been complied with.

The unfortunate Meer Jaffier was a stranger to distress until I had left the country. It was when the King's son, and a large body of Morattoes, invaded and ravaged his kingdom for a twelvemonth together, and had stopped the receipt of great part of his revenues. It was then that the Nabob began for the first time to experience the missortunes of distress. Yet still his distress was not so great, but that his successor was able, immediately, to bestow on the Company eight lack of rupees, or 100,000 l. sterling, to carry on the war on the coast of Coromandel.

As to the fourth article, That no fervant of the Company shall remit money home but by their cash; which order I broke through, by remitting large sums by the Dutch cash. That I did,

I did, jointly with my friends, remit a large fum of money to England, by bills on the Dutch Company, is most true, for this reason only, that the English Company's treasury was fo full, that their fervants abroad thought it inconsistent with the Company's interest to grant bills, when it was more than possible, the French might drive us out of all India, and the Company not only lose what they had just acquired, but become responsible for the immense fums, which under the terror that then prevailed of the French force, would be immediately poured into their treasury: and though I should have thought it a great advantage to have remitted my fortune home at that dangerous crisis, by bills on the Company, when the motion was made in council to receive all monies tendered for bills payable in three years. I was myself one of those who opposed it; and the only money received into the treasury was Mr. Watson's estate, to shew a sense of the services received from him: Sums due to the merchants of London, for coral and bullion: small sums from the principal servants, for remittances to their families, and the purchase of necessaries, were received, and bills granted for them.

I flatter myself it will give me some merit with the Company, that I opposed the fatal designs of the Dutch in the armament they had fent to Bengal, with fo much perseverance, more especially as I had at that time the greatest part of my property in their power, the bills given me not being wholly due till three years after fight; and I could not but be very fensible at that time of the risque I ran, by fuch an opposition to that dangerous undertaking; and I will venture to affirm, that had not my trustees agreed to accept the payment of the money upon the Dutch Company's own terms, which were a very confiderable deduction for prompt payment, the greatest part of my fortune would have been at this day in their hands.

As to the fifth article, That I was guilty of a breach of trust, by supplying a Portuguese ship, bound from Bengal to Lisbon, with goods and money, to the great detriment of the Company; there is not one word of truth in the whole of this affertion. Those who did, may plead the same desence that I do for my remittance by the Dutch: the inference drawn is absurd; the Company had more money than goods to purchase.

I now come to the last article, viz. That I have no right to an annual revenue of 27,000 l. a year, given me by the Nabob, which must be supported and maintained at the Company's expence.

In this article, party refentment feems to have confounded all ideas of right and wrong; and my opposition to the present leading gentlemen has cast such a mist before their eyes, that they cannot discern that right which they had before acknowledged by every act that could express it. But as I intend to make the Proprietors the judges of that right, I shall explain the cause, for which the Jaghire, or Lordship, which produces to me an annual income of about 30,000 l. a year, was given me, and the nature of the grant by which I hold it.

Soon after the battle of Plassey, the Nabob, of his own free motion, without the least hint or application from me, sent a petition to the court of Dehli, that I might be created an Omrah, or Lord of the Empire. In the beginning of the year 1758, the Nabob received and delivered me the patent (with other honours accompanying it); by which I was created an Omrah of the command of 5000 foot, and the rank of 6000 horse.

According to the custom of the country, the Soubah assigns a Jaghire, or estate, within his own provinces, to support the dignity of the new created Omrah; but at the time I received the patent of creation, I knew of no such intention in the Nabob, whose friendship for me gave way to other views.

I have before hinted, that the Soubah's first plan was to evade the execution of the remaining part of the treaty, and to appear, in the eyes of his subjects, as maintaining himself by his own strength, and not by our support.

He took the field, as early as the feafon would permit, with an army of 80,000 horse and foot; and it was with reluctance that he fent to me to join him with our troops, and more from the apprehension of leaving us so near his capital during his absence, than from any expectation of our assistance in the furthering of his designs.

We marched the army up, now reduced by the malignancy of the climate to 300 English, with two battalions of Seapoys, and a train of artillery.

At our first meeting I reproached him with the duplicity of his conduct, and infifted on his immediately paying down all arrears, and that he should give secure assignments for the payment of the rest of the treaty-money. I freely gave him my opinion of his keeping up fuch a vast army, which drained his treasury to no manner of purpose; that the example of his predecessor might be a lesson to him how little fuch troops were to be depended upon; and that when danger pressed, he would find the English his only true and firm support. In his exaltation to his new grandeur, and feeing himself at the head of such a numerous army, my advice made little impression; so I concluded with telling him, he might amuse himfelf with his own ideas, but, in the mean time, that I was neither to be trifled with nor intimidated:

midated; and, after some struggle, I obtained immediate payment of the arrears, amounting to several hundred thousand pounds, and an affignment of certain districts, the revenues of which were to be collected by the Company, as a security for the rest; and from this instant the Nabob may have been said to comply literally with his treaty.

These were the Nabob's sentiments at that time, and such they continued until the following year, when the province of Bahar being invaded by the Mogul's son, (drove by the Vizier from his father's court) the Nabob attempted to take the field, and now experienced what I always inculcated to be true. Vast arrears were due to his numerous army, who, taking advantage of the times, surrounded him, and insisted not only on the whole of the arrears due from his predecessor as well as himself, but on an advance of pay. These demands amounting to many millions, it was impossible he could comply with them.

In this exigency he applied to us, entertaining great doubts of our friendship, from the consciousness of the infincere part he had acted, and from a just sense of his own imprudence, in having neglected the advice I had given him the preceding year, to disband the greatest part of his large and useless army. Bound by treaty and interest, it behoved us to secure the attachment and dependancy of the Nabob. We immediately took the field, and relieved him, for the present, from the inconveniencies he laboured under from his own forces, who, over-awed by our presence, desisted from their demands. Being joined by 8000 horse and foot, under the command of his fon the young Nabob, we marched four hundred miles in twenty-three days, and forced the enemy to raise the siege of Patna, the capital of the province of Bahar, and purfued them two hundred miles further, until they passed the boundaries of the Soubah's dominions, and then obliged the tributary Rajahs to pay their arrears. In the mean time, the Nabob's army had again furrounded him, and were become more outrageous than ever; and he was upon the point of being put to death, when the news of our fuccess dispersed them, and they became as fubmiflive D fubmiffive and fawning, as they were before daring and infolent.

Services rendered at fuch a crisis, convinced him at last of the value of such sincere allies. On my return from the north he came to meet me, and after many obliging expreffions, that I had faved his life, and made him a fecond time Soubah, he reproached himfelf with ingratitude in never having appointed me a Jaghire. On taking his leave he told me. Jaggerseat (a man of great note in that country) was intrusted with his orders on that sub-Jaggerseat soon after put a paper roll into my hands, in the prefence of Mr. Francis Sykes, Mr. Luke Scrafton, (both now in England) and Major Carnac, which proved to be a patent for the Lordship of the lands rented by the Company, in confequence of the article of GP our treaty with him. The patent was foon followed by the order in the Appendix, No. 2. being an order to the Governor and Council of Calcutta, to pay me the rents of the faid lands, instead of paying them as before into his treafury, he having made me Jaghiredar, or Lord of the country.

Such were the motives that induced the Nabob to give me this token of his fense of my fervices, and fuch the manner in which it was conferred, by me unasked and unexpected: I fay unasked and unexpected, because, from the time of my receiving my honours from Dehli, in December 1757, to this time, nothing had ever passed on the subject, but one letter from me to Jaggerseat, in January 1759, informing him, that the Nabob had made me an Omrah without a Jaghire, which I underflood did usually accompany it, and to defire he would apply to him on that occasion; to which letter he return answer, that he had applied to his Excellency, who ordered him to acquaint me, that he never granted Jaghires in Bengal; that Orixa was too poor, but that I might have one in Bahar. Looking on the Nabob's answer as an evasive one, and that he was not inclined to comply with my request, I never wrote or thought any more on this subject, until I received a fecond letter from Jaggerseat in anfwer to my first, after our success against the King's fon, that the Nabob had turned the thing in his mind, and was willing to grant me a Jaghire in Bengal; but the nature of it, where, or of what value it was to be, I was intirely ignorant, till the patent explained it, and I confess it gave me the greater pleasure to find it to be the Lordship of the Company's lands, because the Company was thereby freed from all dependance on the government.

It now remains to fay fomething of the validity and nature of the grant. It is to be obferved, that the lands ceded to the Company by the IXth article of the treaty, were only ceded to them as perpetual Jemindars, or renters, the Nabob referving the lordship and quitrents, which amounted to near 30,000 l. yearly; and the Company could never be lawfully dispossessed, so long as they continued to pay that quit-rent. It was, then, the lordship and rents fo referved that he made over to me; no prejudice refulting to the Company, who had farmed out the same to a very considerable yearly amount, with a prospect of great increase of rents, and only this difference, that they were to pay the quit-rent to me, instead of the government; to this nation a profit of 30,000 l. a year.

With regard to the validity of this grant, I shall only fay, that the patent passed all the usual forms of the country, and was founded on the very same authority that the Company had for all their acquisitions, the power of a Soubah. This I think is a sufficient answer to the charge in the 6th and last article.

I shall now proceed to lay before the Proprietors the measures taken by my adversaries, subsequent to the election, and the reasons they assign to support them.

But I shall first take notice, that by the fervices rendered to the Nabob, the Company not only recovered the misfortunes sustained from the late Nabob, with the possessions I have already mentioned, but also acquired, and had delivered into their hands, the absolute power over the three provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orixa, whose ordinary annual revenues produce three millions and a half sterling; infomuch that they were enabled to set up and establish in the Soubahship any person they thought sit. This matter may be clearly seen by the letters in the Appendix, No. 3.

This

This power the Company, foon after I left Bengal, exercised, and in 1761 they entered into a treaty with Mahomed Cossin Cawn, fon-in-law to Meer Jaffier, for that purpole, (a copy of which treaty is in the Appendix, No. 4.) By this treaty the Company acquired a much larger district of country, than they before enjoyed under the treaty with Meer Jaffier, together with a larger estate and interest in those lands, than they had in those before granted; for the annual amount of the lands last acquired were near 600,000 l. and inflead of reserving to the government the usual rents of homage which those lands were subject to, both the lands and those rents were granted to the Company.

This treaty being figned by Mahomed Cossin Cawn and the Presidents of the Company at Calcutta, on behalf of the Company, the Nabob Meer Jassier was surrounded in his palace by the servants of the Company, and obliged to relinquish his government, and was carried down to their settlement at Calcutta, where he did till lately reside, and Mahomed Cossin

Cossin Cawn was placed in the executive part of the government in his stead.

I shall not at present enter into the consideration of the grounds and motives for so early and extraordinary a change in the government of the provinces, being inclined to think those matters will be laid before you by persons better acquainted with that transaction than I For the present I introduced it only to fhew the great advantages the revolution, brought about by the removal of Surajah Dowla, had produced to the Company; and that those advantages might, with prudent management, be increased: but at the same time I must observe, that the revolution against Surajah Doula was a matter of necessity, as upon that event only depended the existence of the India Company; and I hope nothing but the preservation of the Company's property in those parts induced those concerned in the last revolution (if it may be so called) to bring it about.

I have before acknowledged, that my fortune arose from the grateful bounty of the Nabob for my services to him; and altho' I shall ever think of my services to the Company with pleasure, yet the Company cannot say I owe them any thing in point of gratitude. My allowance, as President, was (until increased by the additional allowance of 1000l. a year) less than any of my predecessors received by 1200 l. a year. Indeed, had the Court of Directors rewarded my fervices in the fame manner they have done those of my successor, by allowing me two and an half per cent. on all their revenues and monies acquired for them, it might have been otherwife. My adversaries cannot therefore fay I acquired my fortune out of the property of the Company, or in diminution of that of my country, or any of my fellow-fubjects: on the contrary, it is well known, that had it not been for the successes we were blessed with, this kingdom would never have had the benefit of one farthing of the money which has been brought into it, in consequence of those fuccesses. This being the case, one might have expected, after fo many years fervice to the Company, and under the circumstances I have described, they would at least have permitted me to have had the quiet enjoyment of that fortune I had fo obtained.

And here I must acquaint the Proprietors, that the rents of my Jaghire were regularly paid during the time I was in Bengal, and, fince my return, have been received by my attornies in Bengal, and remitted by them to me, as the ships failed from thence, in bills on the Company here, which were always regularly paid without objection, until May last, when, on the ships going out for Bengal, which were the first that went out after the election on that voyage, I was given to understand, that orders had been sent to stop the payment of my Jaghire. I applied to the Court of Directors for a copy of those orders, but that was refused; however, I afterwards came to the knowledge of them. They are to the following purport: "With respect to the " Jaghire given by the late Nabob, Jaffier " Ally Khan, to Lord Clive, arifing out of " the lands granted by the faid Nabob to the " Company, we direct, that you do not pay " any further fums to the attornies of Lord "Clive on the account; and we further di-" rect, that whatever shall arise in future from " the faid Jaghire, be carried to our credit. " You You are to cause exact accounts to be made out and transmitted to us, not only of what fhall so come into our cash, but also of all the sums Lord Clive's attornies have already received on the said account, together with the dates of the several payments. His Lordship's pretensions to the said Jaghire will be settled here."

And Mr. Sulivan, by a letter wrote at the fame time by him to the President at Calcutta, informed him, "That all cordiality being at an "end with Lord Clive, the Court of Directors had stopped payment of his Jaghire; a "measure which would have taken place years ago, had it not been for him (Mr. Sulivan); and that on this head the said President was to obey every order, which he might receive from the Court of Directors; and that more was not, nor must be, expected of him."

I shall not trouble the Proprietors with any observations on this order and letter, they will sufficienly speak for themselves; but shall only remark, that I must think it extremely hard to be deprived of my property because I cannot agree with the present Court of Directors.

But the Company having paid my jaghire fo long without any objection, and even now not claiming any right thereto themselves, nor pretending to say that any one else does; under such circumstances one might be at a loss to conceive what foundation in reason there could be for the Directors sending such orders to Bengal. But, on inquiry into the matter, the reasons assigned appear to be four.

rst. That the Mogul is fovereign of the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orixa, and proprietor of all the lands within those provinces; and that the rents granted to me are the antient imperial rents reserved and payable to the Emperor; and that therefore the Nabob could not grant or alienate the same from the imperial Crown; and that the Company may be called to an account by the Emperor for what they have paid to me: Nor is that all the Company seem to expect, but that I am accountable to them for what I have received.

2dly. That suppose the Nabob had a right to alienate those rents, such alienation could exist exist no longer than the Nabob who granted the same continued in his government, and that such alienation was not binding on his successor; and as Meer Jassier had been deposed, the grant became of no effect.

3dly. That my acceptance of the dignity of an Omrah, or title of honour, (which honour they doubt my having had, altho' they have a copy of the Patent in their custody) was contrary to my duty to the Company, as I might be obliged, by such acceptance, to assist the Mogul and the Nabob in war, even against the Company.

And lastly, for fear these reasons should fail them, then comes a fourth; which is, that suppose I have a right, that even then I have no remedy in England, but must resort to the court of the Mayor of Calcutta, or to the courts of the Emperor at Delhi, or the court of the Nabob.

As to the first, it may be proper to obferve, that, upon the original foundation of the Mogul Empire, all the lands, like those in England, were in the crown, who granted the rents, in the nature of fee-farm farm rents in England: These lands were, and now are, called Calfa Lands, or lands belonging to the crown; the rents whereof were, for feveral years, received by officers appointed within the provinces by the Emperor for that purpose; and the Nabobs, who were then Viceroys to the Mogul, had penfions affigned them to maintain their courts, and support their governments: But, for a great number of years past, that method has been changed, and instead of pensions, the Emperors allotted to the Nabobs large quantities of land within the provinces, to be difposed of and managed for their own benefit; and these lands were, and now are, called Jaghire Lands, and for which no taxes are paid: And as to the rest of the lands within the provinces, the Nabobs farmed the same of the Mogul at a certain yearly fum.

This alteration being received into the Mogul government, it became immaterial to the Mogul what the Nabobs did with the rents; the yearly fum stipulated was all he expected, and that they were obliged to pay; so that all the rents, and also the lands that produced them, them, were under the power of the Nabobs, who might and did dispose of them as they thought fit, and out of them conferred favours on whom they pleased. The Nabobs granted zemindaries or leases of all the lands from time to time at their pleasure, or as occasion required; and in this state the constitution and usage of the Mogul Empire stood at the death of Aurengzebe.

After the death of Aurengzebe, the Nabobs began to assume sovereign authority, and the invasion of the Persians, before taken notice of, rendered that sovereignty absolute; and the Nabobs do now, and have for many years, exercised all those sovereign rights, regarding the lands and revenues of the provinces, which the Mogul Emperors ever had.

It is under the authority of the Nabob, the Company now hold their zemindary in the lands fubject to my jaghire; it is under the same authority, they now hold by treaty with the Nabob Cossin Cawn large districts of country, producing near 600,000l. a year to them, without paying any rent at all, notwithstanding those lands are calsa or imperial lands, and would, in case the original constitution of the Mogul Empire existed, be subject to the payment of the antient reserved rents to the Great Mogul, to a very large amount; it is well known that there are numbers of jaghires in the province of Bengal, granted by former Nabobs, that have subsisted for several generations.

Yet as to my jaghire, they now at once alledge it was an illegal act in Meer Faffier, and at the fame time admit that the Company are in the enjoyment of all the lands granted to them by the Nabob Coffin Cawn, without paying or being subject to any rent at all; and that the grant from Coffin Cawn to them, both of the lands and ancient rents, is valid and effectual: this feems a contradiction not easily to be reconciled. But for a moment, let us suppose that the fears the Company entertained at that instant, of being accountable to the Great Mogul, might have obscured the light which the comparison of things alone would have discovered, and that the Mogul should hereafter recover the antient dominion of his empire; it must then be observed, that the annual tribute stipulated to be paid by the Nabob on his confirmation, is in fact the fame annual fum formerly referved and paid by the Nabobs for the farm of the rents and lands within the provinces. Can it then be supposed that the Mogul would require both the revenues of the lands, and also the annual sum stipulated to be paid by the Nabob, in lieu of those revenues? It might, with some degree of probability, have been faid, that he might, according to the constitution of the empire, call the Nabobs, who might then be considered as his Viceroys, to an account for all the annual tribute remaining due from them: But to fay the Company would be answerable to the Mogul for the rents paid by them to me, is an inconsistency equal to the former, and not to be reconciled to reason or the nature of things: And even to furnish themselves with this pretence, bad as it is, they must have had a very extraordinary forefight; and I should be glad to have been informed of the period such a reckoning was likely to take place.

I have before taken notice of the prefent circumstances of the Mogul, and by what means a Prince a Prince, under his circumstances, or even suppoling him in as good a lituation as his predeceffors for feveral years past have been, could recover the dominions of large and powerful provinces, which had long shaken off his authority, I am really at a loss to guess. But, to remove any doubt the proprietors may entertain concerning the power and dominion of the Great Mogul in Bengal, or the fovereign authority of the Nabob, I will repeat the account given by your Directors of those Meayear 1762, in a memorial presented by them which account is in the following words:

fures under their hands to his Majesty, in the relative to the transactions with the Dutch, " By the antient constitution of the Mogul " Empire, of which the provinces of Bengal, "Bahar, and Orixa, are a part, the Nabob " or Soubah of those provinces was nothing " more than the Mogul's Viceroy, yet, for " many years past, as the strength of that " constitution has been gradually declining, "the Soubahs of these and other provinces " have been in like gradation affuming an sindependance of the Court of Delhi, and E

" the shock which the empire received, or ra-"ther the subversion of it, for it has never "recovered, nor probably ever will, from the " irruption of the Persians under Nadir Shah, " has fo far confirmed that independance, that the relation between the Nabob and " the Mogul, is at prefent little more than " nominal. The Nabob makes war or peace " without the privity of the Mogul, though " there appear still some remains of the old "Constitution in the succession to the Na-" bobship, yet in fact that succession is never " regulated by the Mogul's appointment, tho "the person in possession is generally desi-" rous of fortifying a disputed title by the "Mogul's confirmation, which the Court of " Delhi, conscious of its inability to inter-" pose, more substantially, and desirous of re-" taining an appearance of superiority, real "dily grants. The Nabob of Bengal is " therefore de facto, whatever he may be de " jure, a fovereign Prince, or at worst, not a " vice-roy, but a tributary to the Mogul: " there being some kind of tribute still con-" fidered as due, from these provinces to the Mogul, " Mogul, though it rarely, if ever, finds its " way to Delhi. It appears by the Director's

16 letters, that the Dutch, as well as we, con-

" fider him in this light,"

I must observe, that the Dutch, in order to give some colour for their complaints against the Company, made use of the following allegation, viz. "The Mogul is sovereign of the country, and we derive from him, under repeated phirmaunds, a right to a free navi" gation from thence to other places; and this

" right we cannot be deprived of, without in-

" fringing the phirmaunds of the Great Mo-

" gul, which the Nabob, who is only gover" nor of a province, is not authorized to do."

And it was in answer to this allegation the declaration above-mentioned was made by your Directors, who now find themselves under the fatal necessity, on behalf of the Company, of making use of the same reasons for justifying their conduct towards me, as the Dutch made use of to justify theirs towards the Company.

As to the 2d reason assigned by your Directors, it might, perhaps, have been well for the proprietors, had it never been in their power to have employed it. But as it is affigned as such, I will answer it as I would have done, at the time it was offered by them, without any regard to what has happened, since that may have deprived them of the use they at first proposed from it.

There are numbers of instances of Jaghires now subfifting, that have been granted by former Nabobs: there are many, even on the Company's own lands, of which the Directors might have been informed by the proper officer appointed for furveying those lands, who is now in England; and they might also have been informed, that there were many Jaghires granted by the Nabobs Surajah Dowla and Meer Taffier also existing. But enquiry here, seemed not necessary; the Directors at once boldly affirm, my Jaghire to be determined by the removal of Meer Jaffier from the throne, fince the grant did not, as they alledge, bind his fuccessor; without the least consideration of the natural inference such an affertion might produce.

I have before taken notice, that his Majesty's arms, and those of the Company, by the revolution brought about whilft I was the Commander in Chief, acquired the great power and influence the Company enjoyed in Bengal, when I left that country; and that that power after I came away, was made use of to depose the Prince who sat on the throne whilft I was there, and, to establish Mahomed Cossin Cawn in his stead. It is under these circumstances, that the Directors make use of the 2d reason. Now to give that reason its utmost latitude, it can amount to no more than an admission from the Company, that I had once a good right to require from them the payment of my Jaghire: but that this right is now defeated by a fubsequent act, entirely effected by their own agents abroad. The weight and justice of this argument I leave to your considerations.

Before I quit this head, I must beg leave to take notice of the forms agreed on between the Company, and Mahomed Cossin Cawn, which may be seen in the Appendix, and by which it will appear, that Meer Jassier was to remain Nabob to all purposes, except the executive part of the government, which was to be the province of the new Nabob. This being the basis of that revolution, if it may be so called, it will appear, that the Nabob, Meer Jaffier still remained Nabob of Bengal; and it is well known, that he did till lately, refide at the Company's factory, at Calcutta, in princely state; and even supposing my Jaghire to be good no longer than the reign of the person who granted it, it would be ftill subsisting. However, your Directors do now in effect declare, that they will retain my Jaghire for the benefit of the Great Mogul (who would certainly be glad to receive it, as Cossin Ally would readily give any directions touching that matter the Directors think proper to fuggest to him) and that, in prejudice to me and their country; though they at the same time are influenced to retain the rents of the lands granted to them, not only by Cossin Cawn, but also by the Nabob Meir Jassier, in prejudice to the Great Mogul.

As to the 3d reason; here I must beg leave to observe, that the titles of honour used in Europe, are unknown to the Indians; their titles of honour are distinguished only by a number number of Azaras, or one thousand, from two to ten thousand horse, which is the highest, and was the title of the fon of the Great Mogul: the number of fix thousand expresses the dignity of an Omra, but not any less number; and the equipage of the person on whom such honours are bestowed, are proportioned by the usage of the country to his rank. Hence it will appear, that of necessity, no person can be ennobled in India, unless the rank and number he is appointed to, be expressed in the patent; and this is a mere compliment, which does not lay any obligation on the part of the perfon receiving fuch honour, to render to the Mogul any fervices whatfoever; and to affirm the contrary, it must be presumed that the Nabob, in the present case, applied to the Mogul to take me into his fervice: who, in fuch service, might (if the emperor meant to recover the ancient dominion of his empire, or the payment of his annual tribute) be employed against the Nabob himself, if military fervices were to be rendered to the Mogul; which would be an absurdity to suppose,

But

But the true intent of the honour, was no more than a personal favour to me, and to give me rank amongst the Princes and great men of that country; and may have been of fervice to you in my negotiations and transactions with them. Monsieur Dupleix, the commander in chief of the French forces in India, obtained a title of honour, inferior to mine, and had feveral Jaghires granted him by the Nabob of the Decan in Lands, ceded to the French Company, which he enjoyed for feveral years after he returned to Europe, and indeed until the lands, upon which the Jaghires were granted, were taken from the French. And Monfieur Dupleix confidered his title of honour, as an advantage to the French in those parts.

As to the 4th reason, it is well known, was I obliged to pursue my remedy in the Mayor's Court, that the judges of that court are dependants upon the Company: the appeal lies to their president and council, nay the person employed on my behalf, must be dependant on the Company. As to my resorting to the courts of the Emperor or the Nabob, no mandate or process from any such courts could be inforced against the Company; and were these reasons to prevail, every avenue to justice would be blocked up, and I should enjoy the satisfaction in my own mind, of having a right to what I now demand, without any remedy to obtain it.

I shall end this memorial with some observations on the Company's affairs, at the time the loss of their possessions in Bengal happened, and the regaining those possessions, with all their present great advantages.

When the news of the misfortunes in Bengal first reached Madrass, the whole town was stung into a consternation, equal to that of the Court of Directors, when the first advices of it were brought to England. I leave it to Mr. Payne, who was then at the head of the Direction, to describe what he and others suffered from their apprehensions for the Company. Indeed it is the general opinion, that nothing but the sudden advice of the recovery of that valuable settlement, which followed so close upon the news of its loss, could have prevented the Company's sinking under such a missortune.

It was the unanimous opinion of the Governor and Council of Madrass, that the Company could not exist without their possesfions! in Bengal. The coast of Coromandel was la burthen to them; instead of defraying the Company's expences, out of the profits of its trade, it had incurred a debt of near half a million. Bombay and the West Coast (free from all disturbances) scarce paid their expences; so that there remained only a few ships to China. for the Company's support. These considerations, and a thorough perfuasion that the Company must fall, if Bengal was not recovered, induced the Governor and Council of Madrass, to send such a force as might answer that purpose: I was the person fixed upon to execute their defigns; and as the force fent was more than could be spared, consistent with the fafety of the Company's possessions on the coast of Coromandel, at that critical time (being just at the eve of a war with France) they invested me with a power, independant of the Governor and Council of Fort William, that when the Company were re-instated in sheir possessions, they might be able to recall fuch fuch part of the forces under my command, as might be thought confistent with the Company's interest, in other parts of India.

As foon as the fufferers of Bengal were reftored to their habitations, by the re-taking of Calcutta, and to peace, by the defeating of Surajah Dowla, they called upon me to give up that independant power, which the Governor and Council of Madrass had thought necessary to intrust me with, which demand I could not comply with, without being guilty of a breach of trust.

This circumstance laid me under many difficulties, both with the gentlemen of Bengal and Madrass. The Governor and Council of the latter had sent me positive orders to return with a part of the forces under my command, after the capture of Charnagore, and not knowing the cause, could not account for my disobedience: the many dreadful consequences to which I exposed myself, in case of a miscarriage, did not escape my reflection. I was under these difficulties, when we began our march to dethrone Surajah Dowla.

Mr. Watts had fettled every thing with Meer Jaffier, and the other great officers of state, who had all engaged in the most folemn manner, to declare themselves, and join us with a large force, before we came to action. We marched within twenty miles of the Soubah's army, and then halted, to receive intelligence of the motions and intentions of our friends; when to our great surprize, Meer Taffier gave us no hopes of his being able to join us, but expressed great apprehensions of his and our letters being intercepted, and himfelf being put to death. I wrote repeatedly to him, to infift upon his performing his engagements, and to join us, if it was only with 500 men. This had no effect; I then called a council of war, and put the question, Whether with our own forces alone, and without the prospect of assistance from Meer Jassier, we should march, and give the Nabob battle, and it passed in the negative. After this, I received a letter from Meer Jaffier, that the Nabob suspecting his designs, had made him swear on the Koran, that the would not fight against him, and that he could not give us his affiftance.

ance. Let the Proprietors paint to themselves what I must have suffered, under such a complication of distressed circumstances; and let the Directors remember, that under all these disadvantages, I took upon me to march, and the English arms alone gained the battle of Plassey. It is true, the Directors, in their first flow of gratitude, conferred upon me an honour, I believe, never paid to any other before, or fince, by addressing a letter of thanks to me alone, figned by the whole court; and that I might be convinced of the fincerity , of their fentiments, they fent no less than fix or eight of them, which I have in my possession. But as length of time, and circumstances, seem to have produced another way of thinking in these gentlemen, I hope the Proprietors will excuse me, if I affert, for the last time, that by the great acquisitions of wealth obtained by this event, and by the large sums of money paid into their cash, for bills, the Company were enabled to fupply every exigence, and answer the demands of every fettlement in India, during the whole course of the war. To Madrass alone, was fent fent upwards of 300,000 l. which must inevitably have fallen, without fuch affiftance; and with that place, all India. The Company who used to: send to India several hundred thousand pounds a year, in bullion, were relieved from that difficulty; which, at fuch a juncture, they never could have furmounted; and from February, 1758, the time they received the advice of our fuccess, to this day, they have fent very little to the coast, and still less to Bengal; so that this alone has been a faving to the nation of some millions sterling. The lands ceded to the Company by Coffin Cawn, and all the advantages gained by the deposition of Meer Jaffier, must appear as much a consequence of the battle of Plassey, as the advantages which were gained immediately after that victory: the whole amounting to 700,000 l. a year, may, at 10 years purchase, be valued at 7 millions sterling; the restitution made to the fufferers of Calcutta, and what was given by Meer Jaffier to the navy, army, and others, may be reckoned at 2,000,000 l. fortunes acquired fince, at a moderate computation, 1,500,000 l. the Company themselves likewise received received from Surajah Dowla and Meer Jaffier, 1,500,000 l. upon the whole, a clear gain to the nation of twelve millions sterling.

I shall conclude this subject with appealing to the Court of Directors, for the truth of these facts, and call upon them to declare whether they think without the battle of Plassey, and its consequences, the East-India Company would have been at this time existing? As great numbers of the Proprietors may be unacquainted with these transactions, I hope they will excuse the necessity I have been under, of laying the whole before them, which I submit to their consideration, justice, and candour.

A LETTER to ROBERT CLIVE, Efq; S I R.

UR most serious attention has been devoted to the commands of our Honourable Employers per Hardwick, naming a rotation of Governors for the future management of their affairs at this fettlement; and having duly weighed the nature of this regulation, with all its attending consequences, a sincere conviction of its being, in our present situation and circumstances, repugnant to the true interest of our Honourable Masters, and the welfare of the settlement in general, obliges us, (though with the utmost respect and deserence) to believe, that had our employers been apprized of the present state of their affairs in this kingdom, they would have placed the prefidentship in some one person, as the clearest and easiest method of conducting their concerns, as well as preserving and maintaining the weight and influence the late happy revolution has given us with the Soubah of these provinces; on which influence, at the present period, the interest and welfare of the Company depends depends in the highest degree at this settlement. The difficulties we may be liable to by a rotation in the executive part of government, with its confequences, are fufficiently obvious in our present state of affairs: we will, however mention, only a few points. The treaty with the Nabob not perfected in all its branches; the possessions of the lands incompleat; the fettlement in no posture of defence; the French confiderably reinforced with military and a fleet; their defigns with respect to Bengal hitherto unknown; and the impossibility of impreffing a proper idea of this divided power in the minds of the Soubah and others of this kingdom, who have at all times been accustomed to the government of a fingle person. A little reflection will introduce many more, and clearly evince the necessity of this address.

The gentlemen nominated Governors, in the Honourable Company's commands per Hardwick, have the highest sense of gratitude for the honour conferred on them by our Employers in their appointment, but deem themselves in duty bound, at this juncture of affairs, to wave all personal honours and advantage.

tages; and declare, as their fentiment, That a rotation in the executive part of government, for the foregoing reasons, would be extremely prejudicial to the real interest of the Company; in which opinion we unanimously concur, and judge it for the welfare of our Honourable Employers, and of the settlement in general, to deviate in this instance from the commands of our Honourable Masters, and fix the Presidentship in a single person, till we hear further from Europe.

Your being named as head of the General Committee, (in the letter of the 3d of August last) established at that time for conducting the Company's affairs in Bengal; your eminent services, abilities, and merit, together with your superior weight and insuence with the present Soubah and his officers, are motives which have great force with us on this occasion, and all concur in pointing out you as the person best able to render our Hon. Employers necessary service at this juncture, till they shall make their further pleasure known, by the appointment of a President for their affairs here.

Thefe

These reasons urge us to make you an offer of being President of the Company's affairs in Bengal, till a person is appointed by the Honourable Company; and we flatter ourselves you will be induced to accept of our offer, from your wonted regard to the interest of our Honourable Employers, and zeal for the welfare of their affairs, which, we doubt not, you are, as well as ourselves, convinced will be much prejudiced by a rotation in the executive part of government.

We want your reply, and have the honour to be,

NUMBER II.

Company's General Letter to Bengal, dated March 8, 1763.

Paragraph N our Letter of the 3d instant, we the 23d. 1 lamented the situation of the many unhappy people who had lost their property on the capture of Fort William, and had no relief from the treaty concluded with the late Nabob; in compassion to their sufferings we recommended your applying to him on their behalf for relief, if you had the least probability of fucceeding. It is with great pleafure we find, that the late happy revolution and your care, have produced what we had very little reason to expect from the late Nabob. A grant from the present Nabob of such large fums to make good the loffes of the feveral inhabitants, as we are fatisfied are much more than fufficient to indemnify them, even with interest thereon. Altho' the Nabob gives the company a crore of rupees, yet when the immense expence of maintaining the settlement at Fulta, the military charges of our troops from Fort St. George and Bombay, and the the hazard those Presidencies have been exposed to by drawing them off from thence, the charges of fortifications and rebuildings. replacing stores, increase of our garrison, the loss of a season's investments, if not more, and many other obvious particulars are taken into the account, it will appear that the Company will still be considerable sufferers: It is highly reasonable therefore, if the several inhabitants are paid out of the money stipulated in the treaty with the Nabob for that purpose, the full amount of their respective losses, together with interest thereon, that all the surplus should be applied to the Company's Use. We shall expect to hear you have acted in this manner, and that fuch furplus has been accordingly deposited in our cash; and we direct that you observe this as a rule for your conduct, in the distribution of any further sums of money on this account. We do not intend by this to break in upon any fums of money which have been given by the Nabob to particular persons by way of free gift or gratuity for their fervices, it is the furplus of the fums we mean which are agreed to be paid by the Nabob in the 5th, 6th, and 7th articles of the treaty with him. It is thought proper here to acquaint you, that such surplusses, whatever they are, we propose to expend in such manner, as will tend to the general utility and security of the settlement, they are therefore to be reserved for our farther orders: And you are hereby directed to transmit us, for our information, exact accounts of every persons loss, whether English or other inhabitants, on the late capture of Fort William, and what has been paid to each of them in particular, by way of indemnissication for the same, out of the moneys granted by the Nabob for that purpose.

Translation of a Treaty between the Nabob Meer Mahmud Cossin Cawn and the Company.

(Company's) (Meer Mahmud Coffin Cawn Bahader.)

In all charges of the Company, and of the faid army and provinces for the filled, &c. the lands of Burdwan and Minapoor, and Chittagaum shall be assigned, and funnuds for that purpose shall be written and granted: the Company is to fland to all loffes, and receive all the profits of these three countries; and we will demand no more than the three assignments aforesaid.

Art. VI. One half of the chunams produced at Silet for three years, shall be pur-H chased by the Gomastah of the Company from the people of the Government, at the customary rate of that place. The tenants and inhabitants of those districts shall receive no injury.

Art. X. The measures for the war or peace with the Shah Zada, and raising supplies of money, and concluding both these points, shall be weighed in the scale of reason, and whatever is judged expedient shall be put in execution; and it shall be so contrived, by the joint Counsellors, that he be removed from this country, nor suffered to get any sooting in it: whether there be peace with the Shah Zada or not, our agreements with Meer Mahamud Cawn Bahader, we will (by the Grace of God) inviolably observe, as long as the English-Company sactories continue in this country. Dated the 17th of the month Jesser, in the year 1174 of the Ucjra.

(Sign manual of Meer Mahamud Cossin Cawn.) This was sealed on the 18th of the month of Jesser, in the eleven hundredth and 74th year of the Ucjra, and the proposals are agreed to.
